MAHAN WITH WILSON

ON LITERACY TEST Answers Criticism of Trainmen Condemned His Stand.

Congressman Mahan, when he was told in New London by a railroad employe that the Hartford lodge of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen had passed resolutions at a recent meeting condemning his stand on the literacy test in the immigration bill, and opposing his candidacy for senator on that account, said he took the same ground as President Wilson in opposing the literacy test. He said:

"I as sorry that the members of this organization do not regard the literacy test and the necessity for its elimination in the same light in which many members of congress, including myself, did. I can only repeat that I share the views of President Wilson on this most important subject. Perhaps it is sufficient to suggest that had there been a literacy test established say a quarter of a century ago, the fathers of many of those now protesting against it would never have been able to enter this country. I believe ing against it would never have been able to enter this country. I believe that the record of good citizenship that has been attained in years past by those who when they first came to the United States could neither read nor write is answer enough to any arguwrite, is answer enough to any argu-ment in favor of a literacy test as an essental to immigration."

On Labor Day the opening day of the New London County fair, she gave one show alone successfully as the young lady who was to have appeared with her refused to stay and as she had no money had to be provided with funds by the local police so that she might return to New York. The tickets were sold for the second show and the audience was all seated for the performance but she was not allowed to dance for some reason, which is not yet clear to her. Then the manager stuck his head in the tent with the information that the shew was all off. The dancer told the people to go to the ticket age and get back their money which they at once proceeded to do leaving the tent in a grand rush. She then slipped out under the tent, at the rear side, and manager to demand an explanation under the tent, at the rear side, and manager to demand an explanation was just going on a search for him when she was gathered in by a policeman as an accessory to the game which the manager was playing. She was then taken to the police station with the manager in an automobile. At the police station she told the sergeant that she had not been allowed to dance and the manager in turn told the police official that she had refused to dance. Matters were straightened out and she was soon given her freeout and she was son given her free-dom. As she was without money she asked King for funds but he said he had no money as the receipts had been turned over to the fair secretary.

At the police headquarters King gave the name of King McNamee.
